

Wilton,
Coombs &
Colnett, inc.
advertising

February 5, 1970

Dear Hal:

The meeting was changed from Tuesday and will now take place tomorrow night. Therefore, I really have nothing of interest to communicate. However, my curiosity has been aroused and I thought I would mention it to you, as silly as it seems, and as unrelated as it may be.

When you stayed at my house in L.A. you showed me a document, an FBI report, I think, which mentioned Oswald in connection with a redheaded latin. I don't remember precisely what the document said - you called my attention to the fact that Huie, in his article about James Earl Ray, talked of the redheaded latin in Canada. Last night I went to see the movie Topaz. In the movie, one of Castro's aides, I've forgotten the man's name, was attended throughout the movie by a redheaded Cuban. The story is about the Cuban missile crisis, French intelligence, etc. - I didn't read the book so perhaps the redhead came about strictly through central casting in Hollywood. But I'm curious as to whether the character in the book had red hair. Did you by any chance read the book?

On a more personal note, I will probably be getting married sometime this summer. I met a marvelous boy from France and right now it's a little difficult - we're trying everything just to keep him in the country at the moment. He's here on a tourist visa and getting an immigrant visa is next to impossible. We have half a dozen people helping us though and I'm sure we'll get it sorted out eventually. In spite of all the red tape and confusion and irritation with the American immigration and department of employment, I'm very happy.

I'm at work and my boss just came in -

Jamie will write but she said not to be disappointed - it's really no better than it was a year ago - she's going to a different school now and they can read and write if they want to but they also teach the girls how to cook and sew and paint and she's far more interested in cooking (she makes cookies, cake, bread, cupcakes and carrot salad thus far. They all look different but they all taste the same). Anyway she sends her love.

Chantel